In the days when Cyrenius was governor of Syria, a decree that all the then known world should be taxed was issued by Cesar Augustus, the ruler of the might Roman Empire. Following the issuance of this imperial decree, every man went into the city nearest which he lived, for to pay his taxes. Among those who went up from Gallee, out of the city of Nasareth, to Bethlebem of Judea, in order to pay the tax that had been levied upon him, was one Joseph. He took his wife Mary with him. Finding the ims all filed with the ingathering population, this humble family found lodging in the stable of the overcrowded inn, the babe, Jesus, was born. Keeping watch over their flocks by night, in that same country were certain shepherds, to whom the angel of the Lord appeared, "and the glory of the Lord shone round about them; and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them. Fear not; for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born them, Fear not; for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. The world's armies and navies are composed of 5,569,000 men. If these men were to form a great hollow square, each man standing facing his neighbor, and with arm extended so his finger tips would touch his neighbor's shoulder, this hollow square of living humanity could encompass the District of Columbia, which is ten miles square. But only once? Ah, no, more than that; the hollow square could be formed entirely around the District of Columbia, where we live, not once, but seventy-nine different times, and never using the same man twice.
